Mr Kjono,

The nature of this grant is somewhat complex. Washington BREATHE is a partner with a group of American Indian/Alaska Native advocates working in several states (including; Washington, Oregon, Alaska, Montana, Idaho, South Dakota, Oklahoma, Arizona and Nevada) to develop a network to share knowledge in native communities about tobacco issues. Washington BREATHE is the administrator of the grant in that I, as Project Director, coordinate the dissemination of funds and maintain reporting requirements to the funding source. The American Cancer Society, Great West Division will fiscally manage funds and make payments as needed.

I hope this helps.

Mr. Knox,

As you know from copies of my previous E-Mails on the subject, I am writing about Washington Breathe and I-890. The nature of my inquiry is to confirm information from publicly identified authoritative sources (such as yourself as Project Director on this grant) for that series of articles.

My sources tell me that funds from the below-referenced grant will be directed to Washington Breathe for use with Native American tobacco control programs in Washington.

You have already confirmed below one part of my inquiry:

"1. Is it true that the above grant will be used to work with Native American populations on tobacco control issues?
YES"

Having said that I restate my previous question:

Is Washington Breathe a current or projected payee or administrator that will be involved with that grant in any way?

Thank you for your attention to these matters.
